

IN THE SPECIFICATION

Change the paragraph at page 2, lines 17-22 as follows: (Clean copy)

5

AM

Web-page designers traditionally allow for users' data queries by preparing a query form suitable to the nature of the expected queries. Such query forms are typically prepared by generating a number of hypertext markup language (HTML) elements that appear in the overall web page design. Cooperatively, these HTML 10 elements represent the query form. One such example is the patent search facility of the United States Patent & Trademark Office web-site